Beautiful, exotic Sapele is an African hardwood similar to—and often used in place of—Mahogany. Sapele features interlocking, fine textured grain that frequently changes direction.

Our Sapele is “quarter sawn” at the mill, a process that creates a ribbon or stripe effect, almost as if the wood glows with an internal light. As you move around a room full of Sapele, you will notice that the grain pattern and color seem to shift with the changing light—a very striking effect!

Sapele is offered in both our Sky Valley Framed and Euro frameless lines, in most door styles and stain colors.

Light-sensitive Sapele will darken with age, a process that will be accelerated with exposure to sunlight.

Designing with Sapele

Sapele is a beautiful species with a widely varied grain pattern that seems to “glow” with ribbons of inner light.

When designing with Sapele, keep in mind that this veneer is not sequentially matched – that means that every door and drawer front is likely to have different color and grain patterns. Cabinets with many doors and drawer fronts may end up with a “patchwork” appearance of colors, grain patterns and ribboning.

At right and above: the wide range of natural grain patterns and color variations found in Sapele are quite visible in base cabinets, where a number of doors and drawers are adjacent to each other.
